1.1 Overview

A medical clinic is a healthcare facility where doctors, nurses, and other medical professionals provide outpatient care to patients.

These clinics offer a wide range of services, including general medical consultations, preventive care, vaccinations, minor surgeries, and diagnostic tests.

Medical clinics are essential for primary healthcare, often serving as the first point of contact for patients with various health concerns.

Patients visit clinics for routine check-ups, treatment of common illnesses, and management of chronic conditions. Clinics can be privately owned, part of a healthcare network, or operated by the government, catering

3.RESULT

HealthHub retrieves your lab test results from the medical record systems of public healthcare institutions. Results are only available for general lab tests and COVID-19 tests.

You will only be able to view lab test results from the past 3 years, in descending order with the most recent lab test results listed on top. In addition, lab test results displayed on HealthHub may not contain all the details that are provided in the lab report given to you. Please refer to the printed report collected from the hospital for your detailed results.

Do note that the “Result Date” is the latest date made available from the hospital’s records. It may differ from your printed lab report.
